

#146 WRITE A CHARACTER THAT REPRESENTS A SEASON.

 thelifeofmine3.wordpress.com/2024/03/15/write-a-character-that-represents-a-season/

March 16, 2024

Person 1: Hey, ever think about how a character would be if they were the lively spirit of spring?

Person 2: Oh, totally! They'd be like a fresh start, dancing around, forgetting any past heat, and just blooming with a big ol' flower of smiles.

Person 1: Now, picture making a character that shows the warmth and growth of summer. Any ideas?

Person 2: I'm thinking like a cactus coming to life, you know? Just like us humans, dealing with the heat but still blooming with flowers. This character's a specialist at adapting with less water.

Person 1: Can you create a character representing the changing colors and transformations of autumn? What's your take on that?

Person 2: Life's a journey, man. People say our character's set by age 5, but I believe every stage changes us. New circumstances, experiences, lifestyle – it's not a flaw; it's about getting better. Changes might sting at first, but they give us wisdom, you know?

Person 1: How about a character showing the calm and reflective vibes of winter?

Person 2: Winter vibes hit us all. We want quick results, solutions, instant fun. But with every urge comes hurt, maybe even hating what we once loved. Eventually, though, we find that calm, reflecting on what we craved. It transforms into this chill, steady waiting, and letting go of stuff.

Person 1: Now, imagine a character going through different seasons. How would they feel as they experience each one?

Person 2: Totally relatable, man! Summer's all about that energy for chasing goals, but life's reality drains us. Rainy days bring both pleasant success and painful failure. Winter makes us face mistakes, find some calm, and regain strength. Finally, spring – the happy season rewarding our hard work and making us the best version of ourselves.